Costume design

In the play 'Twelfth Night', Viola disguises herself as a boy called Cesario.

In Shakespeare's day, all the characters were played by male actors, with the women's roles being played by young boys. In this play therefore the audience would have seen a young boy, playing a young woman, pretending to be a young man!

Using the separate 'Tudor Clothes' information, design a costume for the actor playing Viola both as herself and when she is pretending to be Cesario.

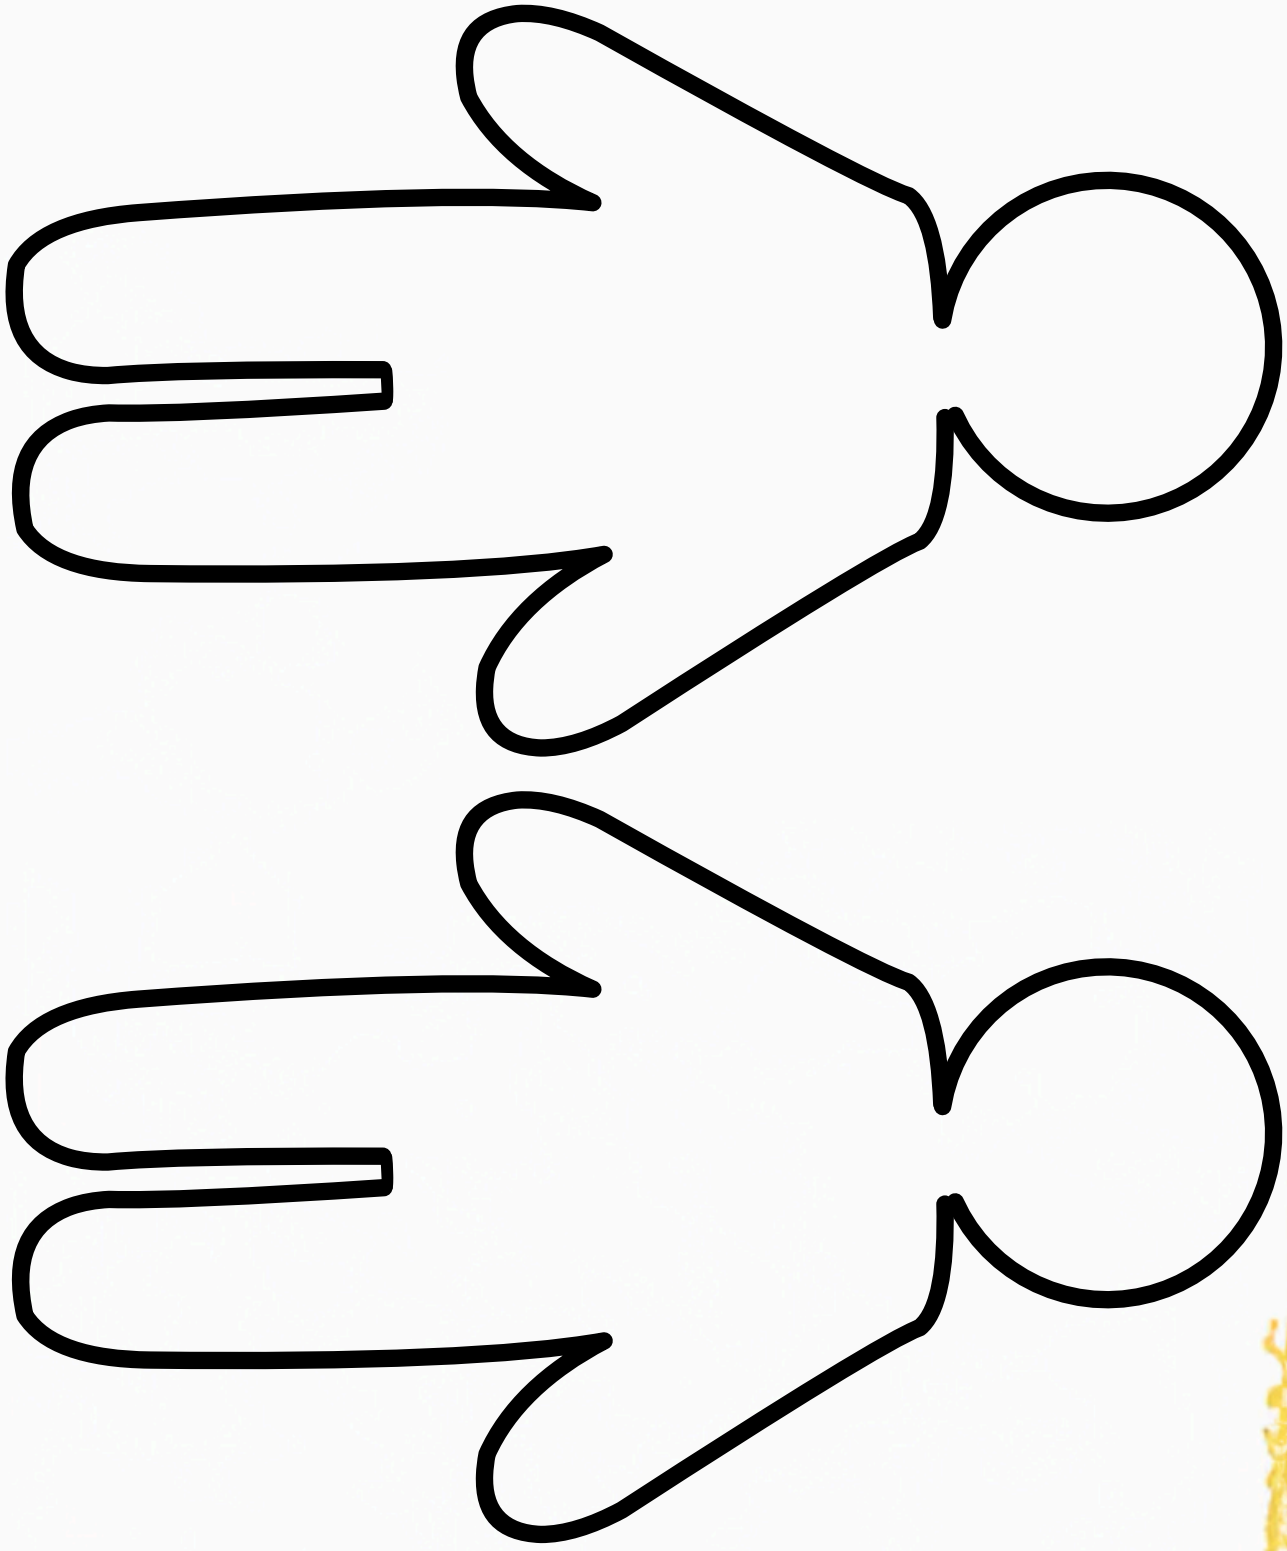

You can use the template on the next page or draw your own people.
